The discipline of athletic training provides such lifelong skills as learning teamwork, following the leadership of coaches and captains, goal setting and time management combined with enjoyment. Research has found that in addition to improved physical health, sport plays a primarily positive role in development of the five “C’s”—competence, confidence, connections, character, and caring.

The Prince George Barracuda Swim Club encourages its swimmers to continue to pursue an excellence in swimming and in academics, which requires sacrifices of both finances and time. This scholarship is provided to a student who is continuing to competitively swim and who is entering any discipline of post-secondary education.
